Alex Sarll says

I have a lot of time for Noel Clarke as a general good egg without necessarily being that into any of his output. Yes, Mickey was a much better character by the end of his time on Who ("I'm the tin dog!"), but I'd still never call him a favourite companion. Similarly, this is fine as edgy X-Men updates go; I'm just not convinced we really need another edgy X-Men update. If nothing else, it does at least demonstrates a strong grasp of the comics-writing basics, which will hopefully serve Clarke well on more exciting future projects. The art fits the general mood, which is to say it's a little dark and dirty for my tastes, but was basically fine except for the reveal of the kids' superhero costumes, where (imagine my surprise!) the girls' outfits are mostly much more revealing than the boys'. It's one thing for existing characters; it would have made sense as a character choice if it had just been one of them; but as a default we should really be past that now.
