Jessica Wakefield is a wonderful baker! At least, that's what her home economics teacher thinks when she tastes the cookies Jessica baked in class. They're so good, the teacher submits a batch to the producer of the television talk show Lifestyles of the French and Famous. And now the producer has invited Jessica to appear on the show with four hundred of her delicious cookies for the studio audience!

Jessica is thrilled. She and her friends in the exclusive Unicorn Club get to work baking cookies. But there's one big problem: Jessica can't remember the secret ingredient that made her recipe so amazing! And the harder the Unicorns try to follow the recipe, the worse the cookies taste. Will Jessica have to appear on national television with four hundred of the worst cookies ever baked?

Atikah Wahid says

I remember enjoying this one! Mainly because, as I recall, Jessica is somewhat less annoying? Plus she's quite chastised by a smug Elizabeth at the end. As a kid, I always wondered how the purple cookie tastes like...

Sally says

I thought this one was pretty fun, actually! Now if only I could remember what that "secret ingredient" was XD

---

Sheila Read says

I remember the cover just not the story.

Marie Paul says

I read this book more times than I can count. If anyone has kids pre-teen age, I definitely recommend this series!

Doreen Custodio says

rereading the first book i have ever read in the series:) still pretty awesome:)

Jessica agrees to more than she handles again. Elizabeth steps in to save the day. This was a really fun one and how can I resist those delicious-sounding cookies?
