To end his standoff with respectable society, Matt knew he'd have to take a wife. Ellen agreed to act as a mother for the two boys he'd sworn to protect, if he'd be a father to the two children she'd bring to their union. It was a business arrangement--but nothing prepared him for the desires Ellen would soon incite.

I liked this one, it was a gentle, rather slow moving story whose characters and plot twists seemed realistic and logical. I see this is part of a series - I had no difficulty understanding the backstory though. The main characters, Matt and Ellen had some depth to them and were both likable although Ellen was definitely prickly at times. My only real complaint was the use of some modern phrases, like "check out the kitchen" or "sexual abuse" which probably would have been referred to as "unnatural acts" or something like that. Still, an emotional read with a happy ending

Everyone should read more Westerns.

This whole series is constantly great but this romance has a special place in my heart because of the hero. This is my favorite kind of love story where the couple is must contend with each other just as they are. They have both suffered in the past and come together to have a healing love.

Greenwood writes a compelling love story, You will be deeply moved.

And they lived happily ever after

I rated this a 5 star because it was a good read. I know that sometimes when you read a series the story line isn't as good a the first. Not this one

Just to much of this repeated the problems and inner dialogue over and over AND over again.
