This book starts out with a little dog that got something in his eye and has to wear a bandage. Therefore, he could not see. It lists all of the noises he hears and the reader can guess what makes the sounds. The illustrations are bold. I would use this in a younger classroom when discussing the sense of hearing and sounds, since it can be a very interactive teaching tool. After reader, the teacher could blindfold the students and make different noises that they must write down guesses for. This could be followed by a lesson on hearing/sounds.

I LOVED this book. When I first picked it up off the shelf, I was kind of sketchy about it but thought it might be a fun read. I took it to work today, read it to my class and they loved it too and it was so easy to have them interact with me and the book as well! The book starts out with a little dog who has injured his eye. He has a bandage wrapped around them, so he can't see, thus having to rely on his ears to get him around. All of a sudden, he hears a LOT of sounds all around him! The book gives the ability to say the sounds, and has pictures of them, so the teacher can make the sounds and the kids can see the pictures of what the sounds are. Towards the end, he hears a small squeaking sound so each page has pictures that question what the sound could be until it's revealed in the very end.

As far as uses in the classroom, I feel like the book could be used when talking about hearing, or talking about the sounds around us. It teaches kids how to use their ears and what hearing comes from. I loved this book and think it could be really valuable for the classroom. When I read it to my class, they loved interacting and guessing what the sounds were so I feel like this could be beneficial to do as well in classrooms. Thematically, it could be used for hearing themes.

This book is about a dog who has to have his eyes bandaged. He listens to all the noises around him as he tries to get home.

I like this book because it is simple. It will help younger children see and recognize sounds. It also has a cute puppy as the main character, so the children will be excited to learn from this dog.

I would use this book with my children because it has a good moral lesson that they could learn from. They would love the illustrations, and they would enjoy the story.

I like the bright colors for the illustrations. The story is interesting take on using your sense of hearing when you lose your sense of sight.

I works okay as a story told about a dog. Not really sure who the audience is for this one. Maybe toddlers but there is a bit of text. Not sure a preschooler would want to listen to a board book.

This is a terrific book for young children. I am now 62 years old and vividly remember my nursery school teacher reading this book to our class then leading a discussion about subtleties of sounds: whether different people in our families sounded differently when they walked by our bedrooms; whether boiling hot water sounded differently than cold water when poured from a cup; whether it was possible to hear a pin drop. In the right hands, this book is a wonderful springboard for those sorts of questions about sound and what we are able to perceive from sound alone.

I adored this book! I do love her books, so it wasn't a huge surprise, but I hadn't ever seen it which is unusual. I am very glad we have a copy, and I would highly recommend it for ages 2-6ish. David enjoyed it. A good part of it asked silly questions and kept repeating, "No." The kids enjoyed it a lot.

This book tells a story about all different types of noises through the life of a dog. It starts out with a little dog that got something in his eye and has to wear a bandage so he can't see. It lists all of the noises he hears and the reader can guess what makes the sounds. The illustrations are bold and loud in a sense.

This book could be used in a younger classroom when discussing the sense of hearing and sounds. After reading the teacher could blind fold the students and make different noises they must write down guesses for, followed by a lesson on hearing/sounds.
