Yvonna says

While I liked this book better than the first in the series, it was disappointing because who I suspected in the beginning turn out to be the culprit. Still a nice short read.

Miranda says

Cute, short mystery. Very little continuous story development, but characters are still charming with more stories to share. Nothing spectacular, but enjoyable.

Renae Rogers says

I don't typically expect earth-shattering reads from cozy mysteries, and this one was generally true to type. A bit like an eclair, really; light, not very filling, and pretty easy to digest. I do get annoyed sometimes when the main character in a cozy keeps things from the authorities while she plays detective, but I also know that there usually wouldn't be a whole lot to the story if that didn't happen. If cozies are your thing, and you're into France or patisseries or recipes, this might be right up your alley.

A delicious book

Being the daughter of a French patisserie dynasty is not easy for Clemence Damour. While out walking her dog she comes across a dead man who has been eating pistachio eclair's from her families shop. She is now on the radar of Inspector Cyril St Clair, who is not a fan of Clemence. How did the man die who did it? The Inspector and Clemence are now on the case, who will get their answers first. This is a nice cozy mystery. Give it a read

Lynn Blosch says*FUN Easy Read

I like the way it all tied together and yet you couldn't figure out the who done it until the author was ready to reveal. Light and lively.

Diane Large says

The story was going along nicely. Interesting characters and all of a sudden it ended. What an abrupt ending!

---

Gary Sundell says

Enjoyed this one more than book 1.

Glenda says

good cozy mystery.

Julia says

A very easy series to read, looking forward to the next one.

Valentina Markasovi? says

Another great one in the series. This book focuses more on Clemence's feelings, mostly her confusion about her love-life, and less on the investigation. The ending was a bit naive and the whole thing was solved too easily, but it is a cozy mystery, so I didn't have great expectations. Overall, really cute and fun!

Mary says

3 1/2 stars. Enjoyable light mystery set in Paris.

Lori Henrich says

Clemence and Arthur are out walking their dogs when they come across a man in the bushes. He appears to be dead and next to his body is the last remnant of a pistachio eclair and the lavender bag that is a signature of the Damour Patisserie. When they arrest one of the patisserie employees Clemence decides to get involved to find out who really poisoned the man in the bushes.

This is an pretty good series. Not sure if I want to read another one though.

Lisa says

As with the first in the series, set in France, this cozy mystery was short and quick. Clémence Damour finds another body, and she's on the case, as one of her parents' employees is a suspect.

Style of writing was almost as though Lin was trying to write from an ESL perspective...using nice twice in one sentence ("It felt nice in a way to be on a nice date" loc 835) and various simple errors (lose/loose, too/to/two). Just needs some editing, unless that's the direction Lin was trying to go, getting the reader in the head of the character. Didn't work for me.

Lauren says

This was a great cozy mystery with a strong female character. I enjoyed the character development since the first book in the series, especially with Arthur. Can't wait to read the next one!
