Jenn says

I found this as a kid and remember thinking, "Finally! Someone is telling the truth!"

mlady_rebecca says

I owned this back in college way before "The Simpsons" were on the map.

Berenice says

It would be a perfect 5-star book if it wasn't so sad/true in places. (Though really, it should get 6 starts for that!)

Brenda says

So many lessons in here. Funny af.
The best one yet.

Denisse says

Lo primero que leo de Matt Groening. Me gustó tanto que voy a seguir leyendo a Matt Groening.

Rich says

Haven't read this since I was in college in the late 80's. I remember loving it then, but it has definitely lost its luster in the last 25 years. "Love In Hell" is definitely worth revisiting, but I think the rest can be skipped..... unless you just want to see the early workings of the mind that brought us "The Simpsons."

Justin Day says

What a great bit of early Groening! Like many reviewers, I remember hiding this book in my backpack and reading it at school. There was just something about reading this in secret, it felt like it should be read in secret. I would say that I didn't get all the jokes when I was younger, but this is another book of comics that I have gone back to over and over again.

Ellen says

Collection of cartoons from the creator of the Simpsons. I don't care for The Simpsons but I love this book!

Meg Powers says

I read this in hiding when I was in 5th grade. It doesn't seem so scandalous anymore. Just remember there is more to Matt Groening than The Simpsons- he actually used to be kind of cool! Look out for the Marlys reference: Groening and Lynda Barry are good friends.

I realized one of my favorite things are drawings with a lot of stuff going on and humorous captions pointing to little details: the Life in Hell books are full of these, and can occupy you for a while. Lynda Barry does this a lot, too. So do the Elizabeth Levy "Something Queer" books, and the Magic School Bus series. I aspire to these kinds of drawings. Somebody light a fire under my ass.

Alexandra says

Better known for "The Simpsons", this is from the lesser known "Life is Hell" series, which originated as a comic strip.

Sarah says

Classic bedtime story.

Liz says

Gina says

Groening is awesome.

jacky says

The public library had these four books and I read them sometime in high school. I wound up buying them from the library later when they were getting rid of them.

Amber says

Matt Groening 4 EVER.

Felly says

so this is a nice way to kill your childhood LOL

Kaethe says

I loved those crazy rabbits, and Akbar and Jeff. I still do.

Leslie says

XD

SmarterLilac says

I really love Matt Groening's books. They have twice as much insight and heart as The Simpson's ever did. The dry wit and moving humor beat the pants off of all imitators (especially the South Park crew.)
