What if the world ended tomorrow? What would you do? Would you be able to survive?

The Earth's Survivors series of books follow a small group of men and women as they struggle to survive on a vastly changed earth, where the dead sometimes do not remain dead.

A great change was coming to the Earth. Catastrophe was about to change everything her people took for granted. It made some wish for death, but death was no longer a guarantee. For some death had become some other sort of life. A life they could not easily leave.

Earth's Survivors Book Two: The Nation picks up the tale of Mike Collins, Candace Loi, Patty Johnson, Ronnie Vincent, Robert Dove and the other Earth's Survivors as they make their way across the country and into the Heartland, Looking for Robert Dove's promised land. A place where they can live their lives in peace, rebuild their worlds and those of the people they meet along the way.

But the world is not done with them. The ones who have followed them from the small city of Watertown in New York, are bent on retribution. The Walkers are searching out the Breathers too. And their own growth as they add to their numbers along the way, brings it stresses with it.

And the dead are coming into their own too. Once slow and shuffling they have now begun to evolve. Their strength has evolved. Their brains. The knowledge they have and can understand. They are building their own armies. They are looking forward to the promise given them of the whole Earth and everything in it. They are only biding their time, waiting for the other Walkers to rise and build their armies in the black night.

They began with no leaders, no purpose they could determine just a driving need to kill and eat. But time begins to change them, their direction and their purpose, and it brings forth a leader, Donita. She begins to lead the Walkers against the Breathers.

Follow along as the two groups race towards their destiny. Both looking to re-settle the Earth...

A little From the dead... Meet Donita...

~In the Trees~

The eyes watched her and the other cows from the cover of the trees. The hunger was terrible, all consuming, and it came in crashing waves. The impulse to feed seemed to be the only coherent thought she had. It was hard to think around, hard to think past.

A few weeks ago she had been... Been? But it did no good, she could not force the memory to come. A name came, Donita... she had been Donita, she knew that, but that was all she knew. And a name was not everything she had been. She had been something else... Something more, but she could not get to whatever it was though. Something that did not wander through the woods. Something that was not driven by all consuming passions that she could not understand.

She turned her eyes up to the moon. It pulled at her. Something in it spoke directly to something inside of her. Something deep. Something she believed had always been there, but there had never been a need to address because it lived under the surface. Out of her line of thought, sight... Below her emotions... Now it didn't. Now it ruled everything. It was all she could do not to rush from the trees and find the smell that tempted her and consume it. Eat it completely. Leave nothing at all. Oh to do it... To do it...

Candace In Trouble..

She finished and had just stood back up, when she felt the cold barrel of a pistol touch her neck.

"Well look at this," a low voice said, "Ain't you something."

Candace's heart crashed hard against her ribs. She sucked in a breath, and tried to quiet her racing heart. Her voice sounded shaky to her ears as she spoke.

"What... What do you want," she managed.

"Wha... What do you want," the voice mimicked. "... What do you think that I want," he asked? One hand stroked lightly against her face. Leaving the feel of calloused fingers and the smell of unwashed flesh.

"I think you know, Missy... I think you know."
