Fight to the Edge of Earth Tonight Michael Angliss

There has always, since our time first began, been humankind's quest to conquer the unanswered of questions, many of them about the stretches of the universe itself that lie beyond our humble planet... But our forebears never, far less habitually, travelled into space. Today, doctors Arthur and Leroy Lloyd-Jones, both distinguished industrial chemists, both co-founders and co-owners of the prosperous and well-known AL Mechanical and Industrial Corporation headquartered in London, ride into space almost biannually, on orbital tourist flights... The Lloyd-Joneses' most recent such highly expensive tour is part-financed by an unknown third party, in exchange for research in space...

When the spaceport in New Mexico welcomes back the spacecraft 'NightcruiserFive' crew, all is fine as usual. Or is it so? Something, eventually, seems far wrong with one of those who returned to Earth on board that flight... The life of the Australian Security Intelligence Organisation's best secret agent, Luthan Fennes, aka the 'Retimer', is swept into finding out what really happened on 'NightcruiserFive'—he has every reason in the world to know... Who is it who bought the Lloyd-Joneses' research? What did these two doctors discover on tour and bring back with them...?

Michael Angliss says

Kirkus Reviews lists this book in the positive Recommendations section of the Kirkus Reviews web site, and says of the book, quote, 'The Retimer is at his best in the field, and genre fans will gladly follow the spy who leaves behind nothing but bullet holes.'

This makes it two out of two reviews from Kirkus Reviews that have recommended a Retimer book and likened it to James Bond novels.
