I hope I enjoy it since she's got quite a few more to read. And I could always use a good laugh-Evanovich style!

Michele Harbour says

Light, fun reading.

Who doesn't like chocolate and homemade at that? I'm glad I don't work there or I would be the size of a house. There were 2 mysteries in this book both quite different. One had to do with an old cottage on a fruit farm that had an old legend attached to it that had resurfaced. Fun, light reading that keeps your interest.

Marlene Chabot says

This novel by JoAnna Carl contains two chocolate stories in one book. Carl's main character, amateur sleuth Lee McKinney, keeps herself busy working as an accountant at her Aunt Nettie's chocolate candy store and also as a sleuth when needed.

Story one revolves around Mae Ensminger, a Warner Pier resident, throwing several people in a tizzy after she brings Aubrey Andrews Armstrong to town and shares he's going to make a movie of her romance novel loosely based on people who lived in the town years ago. When Silas, an older relative of Mae's is discovered dead in his pumpkin patch by Lee, things get really hairy around town. Did Aubrey, who's taken a shine to Aunt Nettie, kill Silas or someone else?

Story two kicks off with Lee's business acquaintance, Julie, being found dead in her apartment. Was Julie's death just a matter of a burglar bungling a job or something more sinister.

I think JoAnna Carl went overboard mentioning the many times Lee ate various chocolate candies to demonstrate she worked at a candy factory. A couple times would've been plenty. I did like her Aunt Nettie character.

Fun, quick read. It kept me guessing between a few of the suspects to the end. Two stories in one book. Both interesting and enjoyable as a lighter mystery.

Wendy says

This has two of the Chocoholic mysteries in it (#4 and #5). I am enjoying this series. It is light and fun and the characters are endearing.

Annmarie (Annie) Kostyk says

JoAnna Carl's books are always nice, easy entertainment. Mysteries are set in a small Michigan resort town where the main character works in a chocolate shop. This one was an action packed back and forth who did it. Chapters are divided by chocolate trivial. Characters are always endearing and quirky.

I really loved this book, it was two books in one, it had little chocolate tid bits in between chapters, I can't wait to read more of her books.

Katarina says

It's no "Great American Novel", but Chocolate to Die For is an entertaining read. If you're looking for a quick, easy, fun read (and you enjoy mysteries), I would recommend this series.

Stephen Redwood says

I think this collection of two 'Chocoholic Mysteries' is probably what people mean when they talk of summer reading. Very readable, engagingly tortuous plot lines predicated on pretty unlikely events, with reasonably credible and well wrought characters, and language that won't have you reaching for your dictionary. The choc theme comes from the chocolate business which frames the lives of the main amateur snoop, Lee McKinney, and her aunt Nettie with whom she lives. It's set in Warner Pier, Michigan, a nice little American town (the kind of place where the murders they get involved in investigating would probably never happen) that gives the stories a quaint, idyllic setting. Bit like a young version of a Miss Marple novel, when I think about it.

Two stories in one book!!! Woohoo!! THE CHOCOLATE PUPPY PUZZLE: Featuring Monty the chocolate lab!! A real dog....not to be eaten! An interesting mystery.

THE CHOCOLATE MOUSE TRAP: Romance (sorta) mystery (YES) and more chocolate trivia!
