A Christmas Collection Stella Cameron , Joan Hohl , Loretta Chase , Linda Lael Miller

"The Greatest Gift" / Stella Cameron

With Christmas approaching, a kindly nanny and an impish little boy conspire to help a gentle Cornish maid win the heart of a lonely widower.

"Falling Stars" / Loretta Chase

'Tis the season for forgiveness, as a gallant gentleman renews his acquaintance with the enchanting lady who spurned him ten years before—and rekindles Yuletide fires of love and longing.

"The Scent of Snow" / Linda Lael Miller

In America's West, a desperate woman trapped in a web of lies discovers new hope for romance at Christmastime through an act of faith...and the steadfast devotion of a handsome farmer.

"Footsteps in the Snow" / Joan Hohl

A Christmas Eve miracle transports a sad and beautiful innkeeper two hundred years into the past—to discover the glorious ecstasy of true and timeless love in the arms of a dashing colonial spy.

A collection of romance stories features the tale of a Cornish maid who finds love with the help of a kindly nanny; a gallant gentleman begins anew with the woman who spurned him years before; and others.

First two stories: relatively normal romance novellas. Charming, 90s vintage, normally paced novellas. The second two...I need to get independent confirmation of this, because I might just have been sleep deprived while finishing this collection, but initial impression is that they were cracked the F out. Once I realized this, though, I was able to continue reading without too much smiting of my brow. Mostly. Plus, the utter ridiculousness of the last story has left me in a good mood. I don't know if it was worth the epic search I undertook to find this collection (because I'm a completionist and wanted to read that Loretta Chase story), but it was a pleasant interlude.

Ann says

Somehow unremarkable. I've already forgotten what the novellas were about.

Ingrid says

More Christmas fluff for the heat.

Oriana says

Novellas by Stella Cameron and Loretta Chase are superb! They are both full of lovely scenes and sympathetic characters and I could give them 4 stars without thinking twice. Now, I had some troubles with the other two, especially the Linda Lael Miller which I found too hasty and even a bit odd. Maybe it's me but I didn't feel any "christmas joy" in those and this is, by all means, a Christmas anthology.

This rating is only for Loretta Chase's novella. I believe her writing has evolved quite a lot since this was written.

...Christina lay stunned and breathless, blinking at the vivid blue sky. In the next instant, she was staring into the very white, rigid countenance of Marcus Greyson.

Before she could utter a syllable, he caught her in his arms and pulled her tight against him. His chest heaved as though he'd been running for his life. She could have told him she was quite uninjured, and the only damage she was like to suffer
